If you're considering textiles, then you're not alone, especially as the desire for multifunctional living is increasing. "More and more we are being asked to design kitchens which form part of a larger space incorporating dining and living space," says Camilla Pringle of Peden & Pringle. "This allows us to introduce a further layer of colour and texture to the space, from upholstered breakfast bar stools, dining chairs and a sofa with scatter cushions in the living zone." This area needs hardwearing materials, says Tom Howley's Katy Daun, "the kitchen is a busy space and you don't want to be worrying ▶"
