Balconies are often avoided, but can be turned into a magical and relaxing part of your home. This small part of your house is a place from where all the natural light enters, and the greens are highlighted. Turning your balcony into a garden is not as difficult as it might seem. There are numerous ways in which you can incorporate greens in your balcony, and turn it into a lush garden. From planters to grass patches, from grass flooring to vertical gardening, there are plenty stylish ideas to play with. Interior designers who can take this route for balconies in their designs definitely earn brownie points. A balcony is a space where you can relax with your morning coffee and favourite book, or stack up on vitamin D. You can practice some yoga directly sitting on dainty green grass, or grow your favourite succulents and flowers by giving your inner gardener a go. Not only does a balcony garden just increase the brand value of your space, but also is so useful and an enjoyable addition to an otherwise boring part of the house. You can even add a swing, or bamboo furniture, or even a fountain to deck up your balcony garden. Statues and sculptures also make for a luxurious element to experiment with, especially with all the options in the market these days. www
